

Individual Mission Statement (IMS):

Per the example below, draft your Individual Mission Statement (IMS) as a simple document that collects and communicates information regarding what you intend to do with your life. This document is literally going to serve as the guiding text upon which you choose to live your life from this point forward. Don't over-complicate it – but, at the same time, write it with the magnitude of importance it deserves. You will update your IMS regularly as your life changes and your Principles mature – so it is not set in stone either. However, its foundations should remain solid while your changes are largely tweaks that adjust to emerging circumstances.
